Soviet Police Said to Accuse Activist of an Olympics Plot

MOSCOW, July 9 (Reuters) — Malva Landa, a leading Soviet human rights activist now in internal exile, said in a statement issued today that she had been accused by the K.G.B. security police of complicity in a plot aimed at disrupting the Moscow Olympics.

Miss Landa, 60 years old, a founding member of the Helsinki monitoring group, said a K.G.B. interrogator had come to see her in the town of Nikolski in Soviet Kazakhstan last month.

In another development, Yelena Bonner, wife of the dissident Soviet physicist, Andrei D. Sakharov, said that she had surprised two intruders searching the apartment in Gorky, where her husband is serving an indefinite term of exile. Both fled when she cried out, she said.
